Dvar Torah - The Influence of Society by Rabbi Yaakov Dreyfuss

We often underestimate the influence our surroundings can have on us. There is a tendency to say to one's self, "I can handle the pressure I feel from those around me. I am strong enough to overcome it." The Torah teaches that one's environment indeed can have a significant impact on his behavior.

In this week's Parsha, the Torah enumerates the eleven sons of Yaakov Avinu who came down to Egypt and then says, "ויוסף היה במצרים - Yosef was in Egypt." Rashi interprets this to praise Yosef in that he retained the same level of purity and righteousness that he acquired in his father's house throughout his difficult sojourn amidst the decadence of Egyptian culture.

It is indeed noteworthy that the Torah chooses this as praise for Yosef. Shouldn't one expect that Yosef, the "ben zekunim," who Rashi himself learns that at the tender age of 17 had acquired all of his saintly father Yaakov's Torah, would preserve his kedusha despite whatever those around him were involved in? Rather, we see that even a great tzadik such as Yosef could be influenced by his surroundings.

We also see that Yosef persevered. He was able to retain his father's Torah and keep himself from being effected by those around him. It was indeed possible for him to be exposed to this foreign culture and, undoubtedly though great effort, maintain his purity and righteousness.

The lesson for us is two-fold. First, we must be aware of the dangers that are posed by the values of those around us. We are quite susceptible to being tempted to compromise our Torah values, even if in a small way. Second, we see that it is possible to overcome the influence of society and not dilute our values. Let us make it a priority to minimize our association with those who would have a negative influence on us, and redouble our efforts to maintain our kedusha.

Dvar Halacha – Remembering Shabbos

by Meir Palgon, Grade 11

According to the Sefer HaChinuch, the 26th mitzvah in the Torah is to remember Shabbos. The most obvious way we fulfill this mitzvah is on Shabbos itself, through kiddush, tefilah and havdalah. We can also fulfill this mitzvah on a daily basis. We do so when we recite the yom in davening by counting the days of the week by their relationship to Shabbos. Since Shabbos is the seventh day of the week, by saying, "Today is the first day in the counting of the Shabbos.", we are recalling Shabbos as well, thereby fulfilling the mitzvah d'oraysa of זכור את יום השבת לקדשו.

YTC Spotlight

Rabbi Ben Tzion Shafier Visits YTC

Last week Rabbi Ben Tzion Shafier, Founder and Director of Tiferes B'nei Torah and of TheShmuz.com visited YTC and spoke to the boys about the importance of role models. He quoted the Gemorah (Yuma 35b) which states that when a person passes away and comes to the Heavenly Tribunal, he will not be able to excuse himself by saying, "I was too rich or too poor to learn Torah." Hashem will ask him, "Were you poorer than Hillel or richer than Rabbi Elazar Ben Charsom?" Rabbi Shafier asked what difference it makes whether one was poorer than Hillel or not. One should be judged against his own potential, not that of Hillel! He answered that each one of us has tremendous inner potential that might go undiscovered if we don't realize it's there. By analyzing the life of Hillel and Rabbi Elazar ben Charsom - how they were able to study Torah under extreme circumstances, we can discover hidden talents and abilities within ourselves. In essence, that the purpose of a hero: to be a model of what we can become if we give it our all. Rabbi Shafier encouraged all the talmidim to choose proper role models to emulate in order to uncover and maximize their full potential.

The Beauty of a YTC Shabbaton

The goal of any Yeshiva is not only to teach Torah, but also to transform the talmidim into B'nei Torah. This happens through intensive Limud HaTorah and mussar in the classroom, as well as interaction with rabbeim, chaveirim and Bais Medrash bochurim outside of the classroom. When one combines the assifas chaveirim - getting together as a class - with the kedusha and ruach of Shabbos, one has a truly dynamic experience. This is the essence of a YTC Shabbaton. So far this year, various classes have experienced Shabba-

tons in Palm Beach Gardens and North Miami Beach. This week, Rabbi Dreyfuss' 11th graders will be participating in a Shabbaton in East Boca. YTC 9th grader Avner Glatt remarked, "We eat together in Yeshiva all the time, but to get together as a class and share a Shabbos seuda in my Rebbe's home is really special."
